How can I get the letter a pitch higher without a sound hole, but keeping the note ring back? I am trying to make a new sort of clavichord, but I would like to get the note C one step higher. It's similar to the sound hole, but it is a bit smaller, and it should go all the way to the edge of the music box. I am not worried about the holes for the keys. I don't want to have to put in the letters, I just want to be able to play it, and on the button below I will hit the note. In this image I have used dividers because of the size of the letter space. A: This might be a good place to use music inlay if you have that available. I would put this out of the way, maybe mounted on wood, to make it more stable and decorative. Depending on how much you want to spend, I would recommend going for a musical clock, not a music box. Musical clock, inlay, pictures, labels for the keys and the music box top Golden Globe winner Bill Nighy (Shakespeare in Love, Love Actually, Get Him to the Greek) will star in the new drama Hope Springs directed by and co-starring Steel Magnolias star Shirley MacLaine. It has been revealed that the BBC commissioned the new comedy drama Hope Springs, set in Scotland, and with a different director to its predecessor, Islington, which starred Keira Knightley and Benedict Cumberbatch. Created by Pip Karmel for BBC Scotland, the film follows a group of women who face the truths about themselves and each other as they try to find ways to prevent their lives from unraveling. The film is based on a novel by Hope Springs author Sally Nicholls and has a script by Robert Forrest and Pip Karmel, with casting to follow. The BBC commissioned Hope Springs at the end of last year, with The Good Wife creator Robert Wright and Nicholson Baker (The Mezzanine) writing the first draft of the script. Wright stated "The BBC commissioned this for BBC Scotland and I'm delighted that they've entrusted f678ea9f9e
